Giuseppe Graziano recalls: I see him [Pier Giorgio] healthy, handsome, strong, the absolute opposite of the sanctimonious type, striking me with his hand on the shoulder and talking to me about his miners—the working class—who in his opinion performed the most sacrificed life, the class he was always thinking to improve and help. (Excerpts from La Carita, edited by Luciana Frassati, pg. 48)

Note: Pier Giorgio was studying mining engineer to one day be able to physically work and spiritually walk with "his" miners. Posthumously, his family would receive his degree from the Polytechnic Institute in Turin that he was unable to complete because of his death from polio during the final week of exams of his last year of college.

Weekly Challenge: Who is your "miner" that you desire so fervently to love and walk with? Find a way to reach out to him/her this week.
